

Restaurant review: Boudin SF
September 26th, 2008, 8:00 am · posted by Candice Shih

There are several French bakeries at South Coast Plaza. But is any of their bread sour?

For the real San Francisco treat, there's Boudin SF. I met a co-worker for lunch at this casual (and packed) cafe recently.

I ordered the Crab Macaroni and Cheese with a sourdough roll for $9.99, and she had the BLT on a sourdough baguette with a choice of salad or chips for $7.99.

The BLT, which features the Obama-friendly arugula rather than iceberg, was the perfect sandwich for a big appetite. Just be careful of the sourdough baguette; it was rough on the top of the mouth but oh so delicious.

The Mac and Cheese, which was actually rigatoni and cheese, was the epitome of comfort food. It was a touch watery, possibly as a result of the real crab meat, but it was wonderfully satisfying (and nap-inducing).

Even though Boudin SF was filled to the gills during our lunch, it wasn't hard to finagle a booth inside. Our food was served promptly, and servers and bussers came by constantly to check on us.

In fact, we were given too much attention since we were visited at least five times during our meal, sometimes with only a couple minutes in between. I had expected that at a casual place like Boudin SF, our food would be dropped off and that would be it, like at Corner Bakery.

It's always nice to have good service but you don't want to be interrupted too often either.

Boudin SF is open for breakfast, lunch and dinner. Check out their menu HERE.